Command Announces the Launch of a New User Interface for the Command Automated Publishing System (CAPS)

New York, October 12, 2016: Over the past 18 months, Command has been developing a new user interface (UI) for CAPS, its industry leading content and data management system for investment companies and hedge funds. This effort was the culmination of many exchanges with our CAPS clients across the country that included a user focus group, quantitative research, numerous one-on-one client dialogs, and an analysis of “best practices” utilizing the latest technology with regard to improvements in user interface experience and efficiency.

Specifically, the new CAPS UI will significantly improve the user experience by enabling them to more effectively navigate through their content, perform tasks with fewer clicks, as well as more effectively view and manage their content and data. Additionally, there are new document-level and across-document features set that further improve efficiencies.

The rollout process began with introductory training sessions with more than two dozen clients across the country and is being followed up with on-site visits and training over the next few months. Client feedback has been overwhelmingly favorable and both we and our clients are excited about the new UI and the benefits it brings to our CAPS clients.

If your company is considering content management for creation of its prospectuses, shareholder reports and other documents, we would welcome the opportunity to discuss and demonstrate the latest improvements in CAPS.
